IOWA.—Among the new and enterprising villages in Northern lows, the Town of FLOVD. Floy County, stands most envisible among them. Situated on the west book of Cedar River, a hundred feet shows its waters, at the terminace of a high rolling prairte, it has every natural advantage to make it one of the finest and most flourishing cities in the interior of the State. One of its most reum-kable features, beside its excellent timber, water powers, lime and building stone, brick material, pure well water, &c., is its healthy location. It has already, though a few months old, become a place of condectable note in the West—being one of the principal points of the route of the Cedar Vailey Railrad.

NASHUA (late Woodbridge), another new town of similar advantages, Is miles below on the same river, and another point on the Railroad, has a most brilliant prospect.
